

AGRICULTURAL BLOC SATIRIZED BY MOSES

It Is Nicknamed Ken-Cap-Klan by Senator in Tax Revision Debate.

Special Despatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD.

New York Herald Bureau. Washington, D. C., Oct. 19. Debate on the tax bill in the Senate today was enlivened by a satirical attack by Senator Moses (N. H.) on the agricultural bloc, which he nicknamed the Ken-Cap-Klan. Senator Moses charged that as a result of the bloc's influence the tax bill was "plainly drawn under the inspiration of the inspiring slogan: 'Soak the rich!'"

Mr. Moses advocated the Smoot sales tax plan as a substitute for the pending measure, which, he insisted, failed to fulfill Republican campaign promises. He said the proposed 50 per cent. surtax rate had no justification.

"There is a point at which taxation of the rich reaches its saturation point," continued the Senator. "This point is variously estimated by both expert and by general intelligent opinion between 25 and 35 per cent. If it is increased the rich—that is to say those possessing capital—betake themselves and their accumulations from the field of active enterprise and enter into cloistered retirement where tax exempt securities afford a more ample income and success from the importunities of the tax gatherer."

The committee's recommendations, and equally those of the agricultural bloc, transcend the saturation point of taxation. And I hope that I may again crave forgiveness if I point out that the solicitude of the agricultural bloc for the people finds accurate expression in their proposed amendment decreasing from 2 per cent. to 1 per cent. the taxation on incomes ranging from $5,000 to $10,000, a figure which with great exactitude brings relief to a Senatorial salary plus mileage and stationery allowance."

Much of the debate today revolved about the proposed tax exemption of foreign traders and foreign trade corporations. Action on this question was deferred until tomorrow after Senator La Follette (Wis.) and a number of Democrats had severely assailed the proposal.

The Senate rejected, 13 to 56, a committee amendment under which Treasury experts have estimated that it would be possible to obtain considerable money through taxation of earnings of corporations which were accumulated prior to March 1, 1913. The provision applies to liquidation or partial liquidation of such corporations, and as presented from the Committee on Finance was objectionable to lumber interests.

8 CENT FARE IN FORCE TO-DAY ON JERSEY CARS

Passengers to Get One Cent Coupon Pending Hearing.

TRUSTON, Oct. 19.—The eight cent fare ordered by the special Federal Statutory Court here will go into effect tomorrow morning at 12:01 o'clock on all lines of the Public Service Railway Company in New Jersey. The new rate is eight cent base cash fare, or four tokens for thirty cents, and one cent for a transfer. The existing rates are seven cent base fare and two cents for a transfer.

A receipt for one cent will be issued by conductors to each cash passenger. Receipts for two cents will be issued for each block of four tokens for thirty cents. The value of these receipts or rebate checks is dependent on the outcome of litigation now under way. If the increase as at present allowed by a temporary injunction is declared unjust the company must redeem the receipts at their face value.

SHOT WHEN HIT BY PRIEST, SAYS PARSON

Alabaman Asserts He Chided Victim for Marrying His Daughter to Negro.

Special Despatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Oct. 19.—The Rev. Edwin R. Stephenson, barber-theologian minister, today told the jury trying him for the shooting of the Rev. Father James E. Coyne that worry over his daughter, Ruth Stephenson, led him to become temporarily bested himself and drove him to slay the priest.

He described his visit to the priest's house, of meeting him on the porch and of his inquiry as to the whereabouts of his daughter. The priest, he said, told him he was not concerned in his affairs. The defendant said the priest then went into his house, returned immediately, and the shooting started.

The defendant said the priest struck him and grabbed him, knocking him against the post of the porch. While coming up to his feet, the defendant said, the priest kicked him and made a motion toward his hip pocket. "I pulled my gun and fired," said the defendant. "I do not know how many times; I did not fire after he fell."

At this point Attorney Black of the defense called Pedro Gussman, the Spaniard who married Ruth Stephenson, and he was brought before the jury. "Is this Pedro Gussman?" the attorney asked.

"Yes," answered Stephenson. Lights were arranged in the courtroom so that the jury could get a good look at him. The darkness of his complexion attracted attention and one juror asked that Gussman turn his eyes upward.

Stephenson said he had entertained no ill will against the Catholic Church and denied he ever had told his daughter he hated Catholics or that he had told her he would like to see them all in hell, or would like to put a bomb under the church and Father Coyne's home. He denied ever having mistreated his daughter and said he loved her.

Stephenson added that he did not know his daughter was married that afternoon, but was seeking her, thinking she had decamped. She had run away five times before. He traced his steps from the time he went to the police department to the sheriff's office and other places in search of his daughter, finally going to the priest's house near the court house.

Stephenson in describing his visit to Father Coyne said the priest asked him: "Do you know your daughter has become a Catholic and does not belong to you now, nor is she under your jurisdiction?" The defendant said he told the priest his daughter was under age. Then the priest divulged the marriage to Pedro Gussman and walked into his house and came out again. Stephenson said he told the priest he had treated him as dirty as a dog by marrying his daughter to a negro.

Mrs. Stephenson, wife of the accused man, was a witness. She said Ruth had run away five times from home. The question was put to her: "Are you very bitter against the Catholic Church?" to which was the reply: "From what I have heard I have no love for them."

The defense gained a point when the judge ruled that he could see no distinction between an abnormal mind and an unsound mind and when he admitted evidence tending to show that the defendant was not normal on the day he shot Father Coyne.
